Elements does not include some of the more advanced features like layers and masks found in Photoshop and Adobe Illustrator, but it has many useful features that make it a great tool for beginners. Most people use Photoshop to work on the image you get from your camera or scanner. That's because the camera is not as customizable as Photoshop, and it's easy to get the job done. Photoshop opens a window (image window) that contains layers, curves, paths, guides, and so forth. You can also use the preferences window to customize the behavior of these tools. An image window and the preferences window make it easy to take and work on multiple images in the same Photoshop session. To edit images in Elements, you must open an image window and work on it. Photoshop isn't so simple. An image window containing elements like curves, gradients, and more, lets you work on several images at once. Photoshop's system of layers and masks lets you hide (dodge) parts of an image to see what's beneath. You can blend the layers together to get a seamless, or blended, image. You can apply different colors, gradients, shades, and other effects, and adjust the looks of the layers to get just the right look. Photoshop's system of layers and masks lets you create special effects like lighting layers or color layers, and you can use layers as building blocks to create a collage or start a web or print design. The easy to use interface and simple workflow makes it easy to get your work done. You can open images from a folder, open a folder of image files, or start working on one of the images automatically opened. There are various ways to import images. Photoshop Elements can open images from a folder or a file, or you can use an internet connection to grab your images online, or from a digital camera or card reader. The first is to open the image window and simply click on the image to open it. However, you can also select multiple images at once, create an action to open them all together, or drag an image from your hard drive to the Elements window. You can also preview your images in the window by cropping and rotating them. You can increase or decrease the size of the preview to show the image on your screen. When you're done editing the images, you can save them to a hard drive, to your computer, to the 05a79cecff

I-Mixed I-Mixed is an American, soon-to-be, multi-national, privately owned ice-cream company that was founded in San Diego, California. It was launched in October 2008 as a P.R. company and is based in La Jolla, California. Background I-Mixed was founded by Richard P. and Colleen L. Mansur, who have their own ice-cream manufacturing facility located in La Jolla, California, and who met in the town of Manchester, New Hampshire. The name I-Mixed was invented by co-founder Colleen Mansur, based on the initials of the company's principals. Since the company's launch in October 2008, the company has been in the News Report Media's Elite Small Business Report of the top 100 fastest-growing companies in the country. It has been profiled in an article by BusinessWeek Magazine, featured by Entrepreneur Magazine, was quoted in the San Diego Union-Tribune on its growing business, and has had its concept illustrated in a photograph by American photographer, Stephen Kay. I-Mixed was featured in a discussion on the September 27, 2008 broadcast of the CBS News program, The Early Show. The show also interviewed co-founder and CEO Richard P. Mansur. The Mansurs were invited to appear on The Early Show specifically, because of I-Mixed's timing. I-Mixed was launched during a time when Americans were hearing more about ice-cream than about the financial crises in recent years. Starting out I-Mixed's launch occurred at a time when the ice-cream industry was struggling. Customers bought less ice cream due to the economy, but demand continued to be strong for healthier options. At that time there were very few healthy ice-cream options available. The company itself was based on a marketing concept – unusual for the ice-cream industry – to inspire people to make healthier choices. I-Mixed would come in chocolate ice cream, strawberry ice cream, and sorbet flavors; the flavors would be slightly sweet and very light, in an effort to fit health regulations. I-Mixed started as a temporary P.R. company, but found that it was very difficult to get ice-cream trucks to work in its model. The company created iced cream "pops," which were 4-oz pints of
